The Measure of Generosity

contributed by Sarah A. McManus, Director of Stewardship

This Sunday's Gospel (Matthew 20:1-16a) can challenge our sense of fairness. Some laborers work all day. Others arrive at the final hour. Yet the landowner gives each the same wage.

It is easy to understand why those who worked longest begin comparing. We did more. We worked longer. Surely, we deserve more.

"Are you envious because I am generous?"
— Matthew 20:15

But Jesus invites us to see things differently. The parable is not really about wages. It is about the extraordinary generosity of God.

Isaiah reminds us, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways my ways" (Isaiah 55:8). God does not measure generosity as we do. His mercy is not earned. His love is not rationed. His grace is not diminished because He gives abundantly to someone else.

That truth has something important to teach us about stewardship.

Stewardship begins not by comparing what we have with what someone else has, but by recognizing how generously God has already blessed us. Our time, abilities, relationships, resources, opportunities—and even the invitation to labor in His vineyard — are gifts entrusted to us.

The question, then, is not "Have I received as much as someone else?" but rather, "How am I responding to what God has given me?"

St. Paul offers one answer: "For to me life is Christ" (Philippians 1:21). Everything he has, even his very life, belongs to Christ and can be used for the good of others.

This week, resist the temptation to compare. Instead, name one gift God has placed in your life and consider how you can respond with greater gratitude and generosity.

When we recognize how generously God has given to us, generosity becomes not an obligation, but our response.
